Aéroports de Paris brings the new terminal at Queen Alia International Airport, Amman (Jordan) into operation

On 21 March, Aéroports de Paris Management (ADPM), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Aéroports de Paris, brought the new terminal at Queen Alia International Airport in Amman, Jordan into operation. ADPM is the sole operator of the airport under a 25-year concession and a shareholder (9,5%).

Covering an area of 103,000 m², this terminal is the equivalent in floor area of Hall M at Terminal 2E in Paris-Charles de Gaulle and will be able to accommodate up to 9 million passengers per year. It doubles the capacity of Queen Alia International Airport, the gateway to Jordan and hub of the Royal Jordanian national airline, a member of the One World Alliance.

Aéroports de Paris Management teams have been preparing for the opening of the new facilities for over two years and involved all the airport's partners from the earliest stage. This enabled them to effectively plan operational tests and training, in order to successfully transfer over 30 airlines and the Royal Jordanian Hub.

According to Jacques Follain, Managing Director of Aéroports de Paris Management:

"The new terminal at Queen Alia International Airport, Amman is a major flagship project for Aéroports de Paris Management which has run the airport since 2007, using the expertise developed within the Aéroports de Paris Group, in France and abroad.

Bringing this new terminal into operation marks a new phase of development for the airport. Aéroports de Paris Management's experience as an operator will optimise the development of the Royal Jordanian hub and create value through first-class commercial activity spread out over more than twice the current floor space."
